The Primary Care Outcomes Questionnaire (PCOQ) is a 24-item questionnaire designed to measure outcomes in primary care. While other questionnaires, for example the EQ-5D, are often limited to symptoms and function, the PCOQ measures a wider range of outcomes. It includes common primary care outcomes, such as reduction in pain or depression, that are captured on most generic patient-reported questionnaires, but also others, such as reduction in concern, a sense of confidence in health plan ...

Primary Care One | Primary Care Measures Background. In mental health, outcomes are currently measured by changes of individual scores. However, such an analysis on individual scores does not take into account the interaction between symptoms, which could yield crucial information while investigating outcomes. Network analysis techniques can be used to routinely study these systems of interacting symptoms.
