International trade in agriculture is governed by a variety of forces that affect the location and quantity of foods produced by nations. Tariffs, trading blocs, and regulations on farm products significantly impact a country's gross domestic product (GDP), and can cause a nation to either enter the market of international trade in agriculture, or exit it and sell to domestic consumption only.

What Is the Role of International Trade in Agriculture?

Agricultural markets and international trade The EU is the first trader in agricultural products of the world, both in terms of exports and imports. Agricultural trade helps to answer possible food production shortages due to climatic or other reasons. Ultimately, it contributes to the prosperity of farmers, industries and consumers.
